Quick Facts

- The Arabic alphabet, called al-abjadiyah, has 28 letters.
- All 28 letters are consonants, and most letters have four different forms.
- Vowels do not officially exist in Arabic. There are long and short vowel sounds.
- It's a phonetic language that follows very consistent pronunciation rules.
- Arabic is written and read from right to left.
- Arabic letters are made up of a series of strokes and written in a cursive style
- Arabic letters change shape, depending on their placement in a word
- Arabic characters make up the written alphabet for a bunch of different languages, including Persian, Malayalam, Urdu, Central Kurdish, Pashto, and Uyghur.
- Arabic is sometimes nicknamed the language of Daaad.

Nuqtah: The Dot

Here, the child is made to count the number of dots at a place. He is instructed to count from the right.

The child should identify whether the given dots are above the line or below the line. (He should start from the right as before.)
